1. What cookies are

Cookies and similar technologies store or access information on your device. They may be session-based or persistent, and may be set by us or third parties.

2. Essential technologies

Technologies strictly necessary for a service you request, such as shopping basket, checkout, authentication, security and consent preferences, may be used without consent where legally exempt.

3. Optional technologies

Analytics, advertising, remarketing and personalisation technologies may be used only with valid consent unless a specific statutory exemption applies and its conditions are met. Optional technologies requiring consent must not activate before consent.

4. Managing preferences

Where optional cookies are used, the consent interface should allow you to accept or reject them and change your choices at any time. Browser controls can also remove or block cookies, although essential functionality may be affected. Withdrawal does not affect previous lawful processing.

5. Cookie inventory

The live cookie preference interface should identify actual cookie names, providers, purposes, durations and third-party access. This policy does not assert that any particular analytics or advertising provider is installed. Consult the Privacy Policy for information on personal data and rights.

6. Updates and contact

We update this policy when technologies or legal requirements change. Contact us with questions about cookies or consent.
